From statehood until 1929, the authority to fill legislative vacancies was vested in the governor without regard to district or party. Since 1930, vacancies in the legislature have been filled by appointment by the county legislative authority(ies) of the county(ies) in which the vacancies occur and, since 1957, the person appointed must be from the same district and party as the legislator vacating the office. WA Constitution, Art. II, § 15
