Lunch periods

Employers shall, at their own expense, provide a regular lunch period of at least one hour, except in those cases where necessary to protect the public interest. Lunch periods must be paid. The employer may allow the employee to eat lunch periods elsewhere and, in such cases, shall allow the employee the time that is most reasonable in the aggregate. The employee shall return to the place of employment within the time allowed. Absence during lunch periods shall be charged to the time allowed for lunch periods and shall not be considered as time worked.

Maritime

Workers employed in commerce and dude vessels while at sea are eligible to receive compensation for injury or death. The provisions of this chapter apply to such workers, except as provided in the maritime law of the United States.

Mechanical aids

Medical aid

In cases of personal injury, the employer shall provide medical aid as necessary. Medical aid shall be furnished by a licensed medical, dental, or veterinary practitioner. The employer shall keep a record of the medical aid furnished.

Employer’s liability for illegal collections

The employer shall not be liable for illegal collections, nor for any action to recover such illegal collections.

Violation of principles

The employer shall not violate the principles of the laws of the state, nor shall the employer violate the principles of any law of the United States.

Employers

Employers shall not engage in the practice of soliciting or giving employment to employees, nor shall employers engage in the practice of soliciting or giving employment to employees on commission.
