contemplating all the dire consequences a treasonable plot according to the President's express wishes, will henceforth act only according to the mandate of the Chief Executive and will not proceed any further in this matter which is entirely beyond the scope of his power to order. The situation is grave and urgent, and as such is not open to discussion or delay. The time has come for decisive action. The question now is whether the President will take the necessary steps to prevent this colossal danger. The President's refusal to issue the necessary proclamation makes it imperative that Congress take prompt action to provide for the exercise of that power. Prompt action is necessary to prevent the institution of a military government, the establishment of martial law, the arrest and detention of political opponents, and the suppression of freedoms and liberties. What the President has done is not only unconstitutional, but it is also a violation of his duty to prevent the commission of treason against the United States. If the President persists in his refusal to act, Congress will have no alternative but to assume the responsibility for the preservation of the Constitution and the rule of law. In conclusion, I urge upon the President and the American people the necessity of taking prompt and decisive action to prevent the commission of treason and to protect the Constitution and the rule of law. Sincerely yours,
