Senator Salomon: “I sure can. I’m sorry I didn’t speak clearly. I meant seismocity, which means increased movement of the ground such as earthquakes. Maybe this doesn't quite go so far as to create earthquakes but create some problems around that.”

PERSONAL PRIVILEGE

Senator Salomon: “Thank you. You know I look around and sometimes I still can't believe I'm here. It even took me a week to believe that the voters didn't actually make a mistake. Before I came down here my father took me aside and he said ‘Look Jesse, there's always one jerk in the room, always’ and I want to say as a as I look around the room here, you all have been so nice to me, I just don't see anybody like that. Maybe it's me. He also said you only get one chance to make a first impression so seeing as how I might have messed that up and I'm asking for a second chance. I do agree that a good speech is a short speech and as a trial attorney I tried to keep my closing arguments to about five or ten minutes and I always surprised myself how long I would go without realizing. So knowing that I have that proclivity, I bought you all some gifts. The first thing I have is some coffee, and you'll see on there it says that it is to keep you awake during my floor speeches. And so I recommend that if you see that I have a bill coming up that, it's extra strength, you pour yourself a coffee and get going. Also, my family is from New York City. And I was born on the East Coast. My wife was born here in Seattle and so she says, 'You know, Jesse, you can be kind of direct you know, which is good, but you're not very sweet.’ So what I said is, you know, I brought you guys but you got some honey here today. And it's the sweetest that I will ever be. So, enjoy that now. Thank you very much.”

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT

President Habib: “That was, I think, the most self-deprecating point of personal privilege that I think I have ever heard. I would just that that the old saying is that if you’re looking for the one jerk in the room and you look around and you don’t see them …”

PERSONAL PRIVILEGE

Senator Liias: “Thank you Mr. President. Typically, when our new members have asked for their first bill they’ve picked highly important things like adjusting timelines for mortgage; individuals; cleaning up motor vehicle statutes; and uniform notarial acts but Senator Salomon said he’s going to break the mold. He's going to ban fracking as his first bill and I think that it is a testament to the seriousness and the drive that our new members have asked for their first bill they've picked.”

PERSONAL PRIVILEGE

Senator Holy: “Thank you. I want to thank the body for not using my last name in the hazing that has gone on around here. You know, being a cop, an attorney, and a politician, I think I offered a wide array of subject titles available to them. I’m what this Chamber refers to as ‘House broke’, and I guess that acknowledges that I sort of know the procedure here, but I don’t know the culture yet. Dramatically different over here. Yet, in the short time I have been here I somehow feel like this is a move from the junior varsity to the varsity or maybe having like a seat at the adult table. And since arriving I want to thank the members here, seriously, for being gracious and the reception and willingness to work together in solutions. It’s been much appreciated and most of all, thank you for letting me become a member of the best club on campus here, Washington State Senate. And I want to point out one thing, my gift today is to complement the good Senator Salomon’s coffee or to fortify it.”

PERSONAL PRIVILEGE

Senator Padden: “Well, Mr. President, I’ve been in the Senate now for almost a little over eight years and during part of that time the good gentleman who now represents the 6th District in our august body was over in the other chamber. So had a number of chances to work with him and also knew him back home. He’s unique combination of an attorney and law enforcement official having been, I believe, a cop for eighteen years or so with the Spokane Police Department and I know worked hard. Went to night school to get his law degree for awhile while he was working. Anyway, I think he brings a lot of experience in everything. Hopefully, though, before he's done, he'll be able to explain a bill that the gentle lady from the 16th District will understand so … Welcome to the Senate”
